ChatGPT is a prototype artificial intelligence chatbot focused on usability and dialog. Developed by OpenAI, it uses a large language model based on the GPT-3.5 architecture.

Launched in November 2022, ChatGPT is a sibling model to InstructGPT.^{[1][2][3][4]} It has been noted for its accuracy and detail.

Reception

According to The Guardian it is able to generate "impressively detailed human-like written text."^[5] After using the bot on a student assignment Dan Gillmor considered the output to be on par with what a good student would deliver and opined that "[a]cademia" would have "some very serious issues to confront" in the future.^[4]

In December 2022, the question and answer website Stack Overflow banned the use of ChatGPT for generating answers to questions, citing the factually ambiguous nature of ChatGPT's responses.^[6]
